Biography

Courtney is Barclay Damon's Financial Services Practice Group leader. With New York City-based training and experience representing institutional lenders in both real estate-secured and non-real estate-secured commercial-financing transactions, Courtney primarily concentrates on matters involving conventional mortgage loans, commercial mortgage-backed securities, and construction loans. Her clients include individuals, small businesses, national corporations, and both not-for-profit and for-profit entities.

Courtney assists clients in the acquisition, development, and financing of commercial properties and has an extensive background representing landlords and tenants in commercial-leasing negotiations for retail, office, manufacturing, and shopping-center transactions. She also provides real estate and finance counsel to clients on the sale, acquisition, and financing of big-box shopping centers throughout the East Coast. Courtney routinely provides substantive support in connection with real estate matters involving easements and rights of way, leasing, riparian rights, adverse possession, eminent domain, foreclosures, and title examination.

As examining counsel to several title-insurance companies, Courtney analyzes and examines real estate titles. Additionally, as counsel to energy-industry clients, Courtney provides guidance on land-use matters and establishing environmental easements and deed restrictions.
