Biography

Ken has more than four decades of experience in all areas of labor and employment law, serving as primary counsel for companies throughout the United States. His clients cut across a broad swath of industries, including life sciences (pharma and device), high tech, hospitality, health care, consulting services, education, manufacturing, and retail. In addition to direct representation of organizations, Ken also represents venture and private equity institutions as well as related portfolio entities.

Ken regularly acts as lead trial counsel in defending employers in discrimination, harassment, retaliation, wage-and-hour and overtime (individual and class-action), wrongful discharge, whistleblowing, and other employment-related lawsuits as well as in litigating noncompetition, non-solicitation, and confidentiality disputes. He has been lead counsel in multiple class-action lawsuits involving claims for overtime and other statutory compensation as well as the federal plant-closing (WARN Act) law.

Among other significant matters, he recently and successfully defended a company in the first-in-the-United States class gender compensation case brought by the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs (OFCCP) and the US Department of Labor Office of the Solicitor. He also has extensive experience in traditional labor-management relations, including union organizing drives, collective bargaining negotiations, grievance and arbitration cases, and matters before the National Labor Relations Board.

Ken also provides clients with day-to-day advice on myriad employment issues, including hiring, performance management, allegations of discrimination, harassment, whistleblowing, and other claims of wrongful conduct. He works with clients to respond to employee misconduct, including violations of employment agreements, restrictive covenants, and misappropriation of confidential information and trade secrets. He also advises companies in connection with local, state, and federal laws relating to payment of wages and overtime; affirmative action; workplace safety; leaves of absence; layoffs and plant closings; medical, drug, and alcohol testing; and privacy, to name a few.

Ken has served as an arbitrator in connection with employment-related disputes.

Outside of his day-to-day practice, Ken serves on several charitable boards, including the Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra and the Martin Trust Early Learners, and he serves as a trustee to Hebrew Senior Life. He engages in as many athletic activities as he can manage and spends as much time as possible with his two grandchildren.
