Biography

Tony is co-leader of Barclay Damon's Technology Team. He combines more than 20 years of experience as a lawyer, over six years working as a professional engineer, and a deep understanding of green technology to help clients secure, monetize, and protect their IP assets. Tony represents a wide array of clients that range from academic institutions to established private companies to start-up ventures. Tony handles patent prosecutions through the US Patent and Trademark Office as well as in other countries.

Tony's practice encompasses the full spectrum of activities related to patent, trademarks, copyright, and trade secret procurement and protection; IP transactions and portfolio management; and infringement and enforcement litigation. He assists clients with developing effective strategies to monetize their IP through licensing and other revenue-enhancing transactions. He also performs IP portfolio due diligence for clients considering acquisitions or sales.

During his career, Tony has drafted over 200 patent applications, including more than 100 pertaining to environmental engineering–related inventions. He effectively communicates with inventors and has a keen understanding of bottom-line business objectives. His experience is crucial in helping clients analyze the risks associated with new product introductions by assessing infringement and validity issues and preparing related opinions.
