Biography

With over 15 years of legal experience in health care law, compliance, and risk management, Meghan represents health care practitioners in regulatory and litigation matters. Her clients include individual practitioners, owners, administrators, executives, directors, and employees of health care practices and health care-related facilities, including physicians, licensed medical personnel, hospitals, and clinics.

Meghan has extensive experience assessing and advising on health care regulatory matters, including the federal No Surprises Act, Stark Law, Anti-Kickback Statute, Medicare, Medicaid, HIPAA, EMTALA, HCQIA, NYS PHL Article 28, and other statutes; licensing issues; professional conduct; scope of practice; employee discipline matters; medical staff issues; health care proxy and surrogate issues; and employment contracts. She assists clients in developing and implementing internal policies to ensure compliance with regulatory standards and consistency across organizations. Meghan has managed acquisitions, joint ventures, and divestitures, overseeing all phases from the letter of intent to closing, while ensuring regulatory adherence.

In addition to her experience with transactional matters, Meghan provides strategic legal guidance for new business lines, addressing regulatory, operational, and intellectual property considerations. She has successfully formed and managed professional corporations and LLCs, handling regulatory filings, governance documentation, and serving as corporate secretary. She negotiates a wide array of contracts, including employment agreements, vendor partnerships, and third-party payer arrangements, to ensure her clients' interests are protected.

Representative Experience
