Biography

Jill is a member at McCauley Lyman LLC, a boutique renewable energy firm. Through a strategic affiliation between the firms, Jill and other McCauley Lyman members serve Barclay Damon clients across the country as renewable energy counsel. She concentrates her practice on renewable energy development, particularly real estate and title matters related to developing and operating clean energy projects. She also helps businesses establish, finance, acquire, operate, and sell renewable-energy-generating companies and assets. Jill has experience with state renewable and clean energy programs and related regulatory issues and positioning power contracts in light of regulatory constraints and incentives.

Jill has also represented public entities in major infrastructure development, including initiating and developing public financing through state and federal agencies and negotiating contracts associated with public-works development. She has practiced before multiple public bodies in her roles as special and general counsel to municipalities and special taxing districts, and she has directed and managed public-input processes and disputes.
