

Episode 1: “Welcome to the Labor & Employment Podcast”

Speakers: Ari Kwiatkowski, Barclay Damon

[Ari Kwiatkowski]: Hi, everyone, this is a Barclay Damon live broadcast where we discuss all things L&E, labor and employment. I’m Ari. Let’s dig in.

Hi, everyone, I’m here to tell you about the Labor and Employment podcast, where we give employers practical advice on a full spectrum of labor and employment matters and the ever-evolving law.

I want to tell you a little bit about our format. We will be releasing an episode every week. Each of those episodes is part of a four- or five-episode segment. For example, our first segment will tell you everything you need to know about navigating issues surrounding COVID-19.

We will discuss the New York paid sick leave law, vaccination leave law, what’s up with COVID-19 vaccination mandates, and workplace safety and compliance issues resulting from the pandemic.

You may be wondering, what else will we talk about? Well, the short answer is everything. We have segments addressing the do’s and don’ts of employment applications, postings, and interviews, and where we take a deep dive into workplace policies and employee handbooks. We talk employment discrimination, investigations, and lawsuits. Department of Labor issues, employment contracts, separation agreements, and restrictive covenant litigation.

And for our employers with unionized workforces, don’t worry, we have you covered.

Our goal with this podcast is really to give our listeners the necessary tools to understand the developing laws that govern the relationships between employers and employees. If you have employees or if you manage employees, this is the podcast for you. If there are any questions you want answered or any topics you want discussed, please feel free to drop me a line. My contact information is on our website at barclaydamon.com.

Thanks so much for tuning in. We’ll see you in the next episode.
